Losing yourself
The Coronavirus pandemic began years ago, yet the infection's impacts are still being seen. Despite the consequences, people are no longer concerned; it has been ingrained in our daily lives.

People will believe they are cured when, in reality, their organs are crumbling and they are slowly dying. Thousands of people are being vaccinated in New York at the same time, and many are dying. But that's not all; the new infection is still transmitted by the dead.

New York's borders are locked; no one may enter or leave, and the inhabitants are on their own. In the midst of all of this, a meteor reaches our atmosphere.

This meteor carries hazardous compounds that have the potential to kill a large number of people. Surprisingly, the asteroid lands in the heart of New York, at Time Square Center!

The entire world takes a deep breath, but New Yorkers are suddenly in double jeopardy.

New York scientists are working on a vaccine that will cure the infection.

The ecology and air are being affected by alp deaths, and the ecological balance in New York is deteriorating.

During the research, one of the scientists unintentionally poisoned the treatment.

For his luck, the virus treatment cured the sickness, but once it is injected, the virus slowly kills people by poisoning the respiratory system, resulting in rapid death.
